

Ecuadorian Association for Cyberlaw and Telecommunications

The Ecuadorian Association for Cyberlaw and Telecommunications (AEDIT) is a non-profit association whose main objective is promoting the development of research, training and updating of Ecuadorian professionals in the fields of Cyberlaw, Computer Technology Law, and law relating to telecommunications.

AEDIT was created February 20, 2003, and currently runs as a civil society association that significantly participates in the debate on the new legal framework that makes the information society a reality for all persons.

Ecuadorian Association for Cyberlaw and Telecommunications: Objectives

AEDIT has the following objectives:

- Promote the development and research on Cyberlaw, Computer Technology Law, and Telecommunications Law.
- Promote legal knowledge related to information technologies and wireless communications.
- Diffusing, among attorneys and other professionals, the use of these technologies to be applied to their daily activities.
- Facilitate the utilization of technology for the activities of its members and related professionals.

Ecuadorian Association for Cyberlaw and Telecommunications: activities and accomplishments

AEDIT promotes the development of research projects, with the aim of professionally and technically contributing to the creation of a coherent legal framework:

Access to Public Information: The creation of an instructive for the Law on Transparency and Access to Public Information is being discussed.

Data Protection: Currently being developed is the proposal for the creation of a law that regulates data, access to it, and its confidentiality.

Information Society: Participation in the meetings in preparation for the second phase of the Summit of the Information Society.

Electronic Government: Participation in debates on defining public policies related to governmental strategies through the State portal.